This can be loaded into Matlab and used with the control system Toolbox in the design of a process control system. Once the user has designed a control system, it can use the Simulink interface, also included with Aspen Plus Dynamics, to test its performance. The interface allows an Aspen Plus Dynamics process simulation to be used as a block inside a Simulink model. C16 means that the user can test the performance of the controller on the complete, rigorous and non-linear dynamic model of the process. Without this interface, the control design can only be tested using the dynamic linear model inside Matlab. C16 leaves uncertainties about how the controller performs on the real, non-linear process. Using Aspen Plus Dynamics with Matlab and Simulink helps the user to design better process control systems, and to be sure that these systems work effectively when implemented on the system. Please note that Matlab uses 64 bit in versions starting from R2015b and Aspen Plus Dynamics uses 64 bit after V10. As a result, Aspen Plus Dynamics before V10 does not work with Matlab R2015b and above.
